

A new skill takes only two things to be mastered – concentration and repetition. Concentration allows the neurons to know the right way to do "it", and Repetition allows the neurons to work together more consistently getting faster and faster. Mastery, then, comes from the correct message going through the neurons, over and over and over. Once there, permanent learning has taken place!